In order to prevent heating of the outer conductor by the transmitted high power microwave energy, the outer conductor of the coax cable must be cooled to prevent it from being damaged from such heating. One such solution is to provide a radiator adjacent the high power coax feed to the enclosure, and that radiator is cooled by a cooling fluid. An example of this solution is shown in FIG. 1. Referring to FIG. 1, a conventional high power microwave transceiver 100 is shown coupled to the input of a fiber/coax fiber interface 102 via a coaxial cable 101. The coaxial cable 101 contains a thick outer conductor 110 and a thin inner conductor 112. The thick outer conductor 110 and the thin inner conductor 112 are connected to appropriate connectors at a termination block 104 and a coax adapter 106, respectively. A cooling system 108, connected via a hose 107, is provided, which includes a cooling fluid inlet 111 and a cooling fluid outlet 113 to cool the radiator components inside of the enclosure. A cooling fluid such as water is supplied to the system via the cooling fluid inlet 111. The cooled air exiting the enclosure is extracted via the cooling fluid outlet 113. Such cooling system 108 may provide 1cdb36666d establish a target steering angle of the steering wheel, i.e. an angle of the steering wheel to be achieved by the driver. A conventional electronic steering apparatus of this type includes, in addition to a motor as a power source for steering, a means for detecting steering angle of the steering wheel by a rotary sensor, such as a resolver, and a means for controlling an output of the motor, on the basis of the steering angle detected by the steering angle detecting means. Such an electronic steering apparatus is provided with a motor feedback loop to establish a motor output torque in such a manner that the steering wheel is automatically brought to a target steering angle to be achieved by the driver, when no steering operation is inputted from the driver. Accordingly, in the conventional electronic steering apparatus, a motor control system is set in a well balanced condition to establish a constant steering angle by appropriately controlling a steering motor current on the basis of the steering angle detected by the steering angle detecting means, and an electric power is supplied to the motor from a power supply through a power
